"Yet during the last two centuries many attempts have been made to alter or to supersede it, in whole or in part, both by in-dividuals and by companies of men, and no small amount of time and pains had been employed in these efforts. None of them, however, has succeeded. Neither the character nor position of their authors, nor the degree of learning, judgment, and taste amended versions anything more than a partial and temporary circulation. They soon passed into entire oblivion, or were consulted only by scholars, while the add and comfort in the acquisition of biblical knowledge was not attained at an earlier period." suited only by scholars, while the old book daily acquired a stronger hold upon the confidence and affections of English-speaking Christians. Disease Among Horse

NEW YORK, September 28 -The dis emper among borses, reported as existing in Boston, has made its appearance in this city, and seems to be the influenza, which was the incipient stage of the epizootic of 1873, but, so far, its reappearance there is in a very modified form. In the stables of the Twenty-third-Street stage line, where there are about 500 horses, the advent of the distemper was first noticed on Sunday, and, so far, but few of the horses have been affected. The disease, or rather symptoms of disease, have not disabled the horses from use, and some of them that have been treated have improved. This afternoon six more were affected. The affected horses six more were affected. The affected horses lose their appetite somewhat, but continue at work. The symptoms are a hard cough and slight soreness of the throat, but no swelling of the glands. In most cases the nose and eyes are not affected. The veterinary doctor in charge, Ned. Gaynor, who created the affected horses in 1873, is pursuing the same preliminary medical treatment now that he did then, and with satisfactory success thus far.
